Field of the Invention This invention relates to a method of using a microwave antenna for killing micro-organisms in food or other water-borne suspensions. More particularly, the invention relates to a method of heating water-borne bacteria and other micro-organisms to a constant minimum temperature for a predetermined time within a microwave oven. The invention also relates to apparatus for carrying out the method. 2. Description of the Prior Art The above type of method of killing micro-organisms in food or other water-borne suspensions, as well as for purifying water, has been known and used for a long time. However, prior methods of food sterilization were lengthy, and the method of water sterilization by heat or radiation is very demanding in that the sterilizing agent must be maintained at a minimum temperature for a minimum length of time. Microwave ovens, also known as microwave heating systems, have been used in the past in combination with particular food products to carry out the method of the present invention. However, prior methods of food sterilization used in combination with microwave ovens have not always produced complete, uniform bactericidal action in the food product and have not always produced the desired sterilizing action in the minimum time required for the product. Prior art methods of food sterilization are disclosed, for example, in U.S. Pat. No. 4,507,159, issued to Morisaki et al., on Mar. 26, 1985, U.S. Pat. No. 4,407,942, issued to f678ea9f9e
